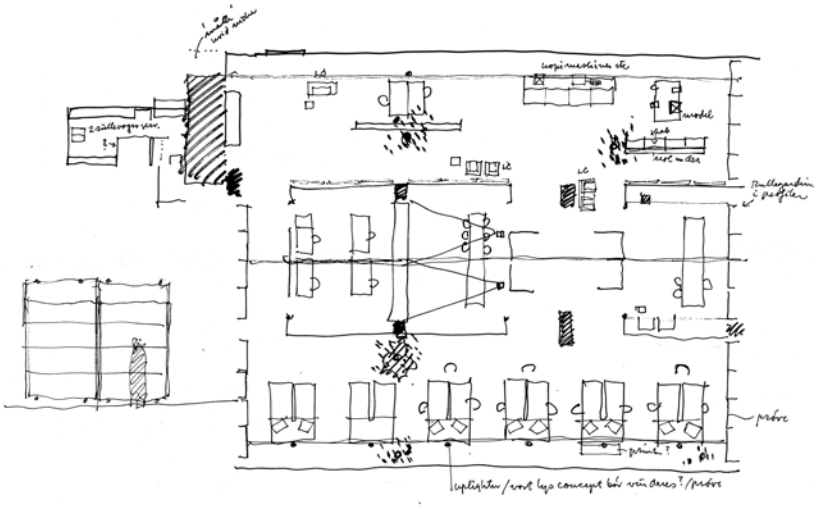
Knud Holscher Design

Knud Holscher's office, Copenhagen
The office of KHD is housed in an old industrial building dating from the 1930s, which originally functioned as an automobile assembly plant for General Motors. Knud Holscher has put the building's unique architectural character to use in creating a highly functional and aesthetically refined studio environment.



Three glass boxes have been inserted into the centre of the space to define the conference rooms and a reference library. Thereby, light and transparency serve to promote the type of interaction that is the basis of the firm's creative endavors.

One of the numerous interior details of interest is the design of the spacious cabinet units. The original metal shelves are concealed behind sliding doors that act as screens or walls within the space.
